Whole page is as shown on the picture on left. There is clearly separated 7 sections on the page, but as we can soon see, there's actually more like three instead (as there is three files involved to make all pages complete).

- File 1: Header
- File 2: Body/Content
- File 3: Footer

Body/Content file loads the header file on it's first line and footer on the last line using Home Web Server's internal server-replace-tags.

Meaning, if I need to modify something on the list of site contents – I only need to modify this one file to get it done on all pages.

Next part would be the content which will be on that next table cell. That is page specific and needs to be written for each page separately and in this example I had there news and wellcome text.

Footer is loaded in the end of body html text using server-replace-tags too as the header was loaded. Footer does have the bottom line of the "body" and all the banners and commercials that could sometimes need to be changed. In that case, I'll only modify this one file to get them updated to all pages.
